Drawing on her prior experience as in-house employment counsel for a global law firm, Arin brings a practical, business-focused perspective to every issue, shaped by an understanding of operational realities. Arin collaborates with employers to address complex leave and accommodation management issues, including compliance with the Family and Medical Leave Act, the Americans with Disabilities Act, and state and local leave laws. She also helps employers develop tailored handbooks and workplace policies that meet multi-jurisdictional requirements.

Her practice also includes advising on hiring and onboarding, employee discipline, and terminations as they arise. Delivering training to support policy implementation and legal compliance is an important component of her work. As an extension of her advisory practice, Arin conducts workplace investigations and represents employers in responding to charges filed with the EEOC and other administrative agencies.

In her free time, Arin enjoys exploring Fairfield County, Connecticut, with her family, where they call home.
